

COLOUR ROAD JOURNEY 22/23 | CALDERA

Rely on it.

CALDERA

Born of intensity and power, behold the crisp hue of Caldera*. The explosive force of a volcano's eruption instigates a subsequent interior collapse to form a caldera, essentially a crater born of fire. As rains cross over the caldera, it eventually fills with water, glistening and calming with a turquoise hue that complements the rich minerals of its environment.

The water-filled craters provide the basis for abundant biotopes, teeming with life, and the colours of those environments transfer seamlessly to designed spaces, both indoors and outdoors. Mineral colours of grey, orange, brown and red offer rich contrasts to the turquoise water colour, displaying layers of colours within their surfaces and suggesting the varied textures of soil and rock.

As a colour, Caldera, can easily take on a variety of looks from a modern vibe to a traditional aesthetic, depending on where and how it is applied. Cabinetry and built-in furnishings are joy-filled with this hue whether used in a contemporary setting or as a refreshing departure for traditional styles. Of course, as an architectural colour, it can wrap around spaces to fill them with the sparkle of turquoise waters, offering a sense of nature's wonder.

The powerful orange of Mars, the rusty-brown of Crypto, and deep brown of Espresso Harbor Oak Classic are all enhanced with the freshness of Caldera's turquoise colour. Together they create natural contrasts of colour, balance warm and cool colour temperature, and suggest textures that soothe the eye for a designed space.

A journey in design may be explored with the coolness of Caldera and the electric, violet-blue of Sphere, both being shocked with the addition of bright red Artist. Continue with the depth of Haitabu Dark Grey Classic and the palette, indeed, seems a journey through space.

Caldera's are formed from change, eruptive and powerful, they embody a chain of events and nature's changing dynamic. Caldera, the colour, is an inspired turquoise hue that brings nature's teeming beauty to any living space.
